Considerations on the long-term reference period

Indexes are provided using a fixed long term reference period (2011-2020) in order to ensure the continuity of the database from one year to another. An adjustment of the values to consider another reference period can be done as follows:

$$\text{Index January 2021}_{\text{new ref period}} = \text{Index January 2021}_{\text{ref 2011-2020}} \times \text{Ratio (Energy Index 2011-2020/Energy Index new ref period)}$$

Why a range on regional indexes?

Although the wind resource available is globally similar within each region, some nuances exist from one farm to another due to their own exposure and turbine types. Hence, the range provided proposes an order of magnitude of the variations that can exist from one farm to another. The further the index is from 100%, the wider is this range.

General terms of use

The acquisition by a company of Eoltech energy indexes, is also an acceptance of the general conditions presented below.

Eoltech is not responsible for the use by its clients of the energy indexes that it markets. The user is the only responsible for the consequences of any type of exploitation of these elements.

In case of a supply interruption of the data sources allowing the setting of the energy indexes, Eoltech will do everything in its power to make available to the client, when possible, indexes established on new bases. Generally speaking, the delivery time cannot be considered as part of a contractual engagement.

The amounts paid are refundable in case of a default of delivery for this product. All damages claimed by the client, for any reason, cannot be associated to a higher amount than the cost of the product.

As part of its commercial approach, Eoltech reserves the right to name the client company as a commercial reference.

Any disagreements relative to the validity, the interpretation and the execution of the present conditions falls under the exclusive jurisdiction of the trade tribunal of Toulouse in France (Haute-Garonne), for which the parties attribute exclusive competence.
